Biological systems use synchronization mechanisms to communicate. Employing mathematical models to describe a simple network of two memristor-coupled neurons, it is shown that memristor dynamics strongly affect the communication between the neurons.